Interiors explores the inner spaces that exist within people and places. These sites reveal how people interact inside buildings, like homes, workplaces or communal spaces. Interiors looks at the inner world that describes or conveys the physical or psychological/spiritual world in which we live. Queensland is a state built on a cultural diversity and this affects the way we interact with each other as a community of people. Interiors examines how we communicate at home, how we conduct ourselves when 'curtained-off' and it investigates the differences between home and the sort of guises we change into once we step out into the world.
