Historical Background

The Platinotype process was invented by William Willis (British, 1841–1923)

The process was widely used by photographers of the Pictorialist movement and by commercial photographers for high-end commercial portraiture from about 1888 to the beginning of World War I when the British government declared Platinum a strategic metal and forbade its use in photography. Platinum/Palladium printing re-emerged in the late 1960's.

Platinum & Palladium are the most chemically stable metals found in nature, even more so than Gold.

Platinum tones range from warm black, to reddish brown, to expanded mid-tones that are unobtainable in silver prints.

Platinum/Palladium prints are extremely archival when properly printed on 100% Cotton Rag paper.

Steps involved in printing

- 1 - Chemicals are mixed and hand coated using a brush or coating rod onto a suitable watercolour paper
- 2 - The paper is dried away from UV light.
- 3 - A negative the size of the final print is made and laid on top of the sensitised paper in a contact printing frame
- 4 - The glass top printing frame is then exposed to UV light, either using the Sun or a UV exposure box
- 5 - The exposed paper is developed in a suitable developer
- 6 - The print goes through several clearing baths to wash away any unwanted chemicals
- 7 - The print is dried
